

one for him to take back.

Gidson was here a short time ago, on his way to Mr Nasms, and said he should be here again last Saturday, but has not arrived.

We were visited by one of the most severe snow storms, with violent wind commencing on Friday eve and continuing with an incessant gale untill Saturday night. There has not been but one sleigh by here today, and that was Dr Pollard who was called to visit a patient, and he had his horse swallowed and down in the snow, more than once before he got out of sight, although all hands had been shoveling and braking down the drifts all day (Sunday); and as for a stage we expect to see one some time but it is impossible for it to pass at present. If I should take the school which I spoke of above I shall write you again soon, if not I shall not write again before I return.

Yours, H. Clark.
